A lad of ten years, who does not know who his parents are, has become the abused, half starved property of an itinerant horse trader whose territory is the cattle country of Arizona-- as a trader-- and of Nevada as a horse thief. It is the period when the so-called nestor is contesting against the cattle man for the open range and by fortuitous chance the lad becomes the ward of a nestor who is killed a few years later by cattlemen. The lad vows to avenge this death and soon becomes known throughout the country as "The Rambler", by reason of the fact that he is always riding across country and searching for the murderers. Through hazardous adventure he comes associated with some desperate characters, who, however, have retained some spark of humanity, and, in the leader, this is represented by his love for his beautiful daughter, just merging into womanhood. Escaping many traps by shooting his way to safety, "The Rambler" finally keeps his vow, comes to happiness--and then his country calls him to oppose the armies of Spain.
